1. In the context of P&M, what one thing are you most excited about right now?
I'm most excited for the fast-paced, creative problem-solving aspect. I really like when I have an opportunity to go out and do something right now (for example, this one of the things I really liked about robotics competitions), and it sounds like there's lots of that ahead in P&M.
2. In the context of P&M, what one thing are you most curious about?
I'm curious to see where the class is going to go. Unlike a lot of my other classes, where I have a fairly solid idea of the road ahead, P&M seems fairly unknown right now. I think that's partially because P&M is a bit of a choose-your-own-adventure, so it can play out in lots of different ways—which is exciting!
3. In the context of P&M, what one thing are you most anxious about?
Choosing your own adventure is hard. It's much easier when the professor already knows the answer and has carefully chosen a series of questions which, when answered, lead you to the "Correct Answer". I know that doing it the P&M way means you learn more, and I think it's going to be fun, but it's a little anxiety provoking.
4. What personal value can you imagine receiving/creating from your experiences in P&M this semester?
Entrepreneurship really interests me, but it's a hard thing to practice on your own. I think P&M is going to give me lots of valuable experience in that department, and help me build personal/professional identity around entrepreneurship as well.
